

Lots of office supply companies claim to be "green."

THE TRUTH IS A LITTLE MORE BLACK AND WHITE.

These days, it seems like every major corporation claims to be environmentally responsible. In fact, sustainability in the marketplace is the keynote theme at this year's Paper Week. So how do you know who's really green and who's just greenwashing? When it comes to the office supply industry's impacts on forest ecosystems, we can help.

FedEx Kinko's and Staples aren't perfect, but they're making the most progress toward responsible paper practices.

Office Depot and Corporate Express are also making strides—but the jury is still out on some key questions of sustainability.

Meanwhile, OfficeMax lags behind—making less progress in implementing their commitment to protect endangered forests, including key areas of concern such as the Canadian Boreal and US South.

To find out more, visit forestethics.org/greengrades.

FOREST ETHICS

Because protecting forests is everyone's business

DOGWOOD ALLIANCE

www.dogwoodalliance.org